By Michael Cook

In this day and age, [anything can be considered offensive].

Especially if it involves an [opinion] that [directly conflicts with yours], and [your opinion (and/or) perceptions are wrong], or maybe even [you trust people who are stupid].

If [any] of these things are [TRUE]...?
Then you might wind up being [offended] on a rather [regular basis].

To [avoid] being [offended] by pesky things like:

[facts] [statistics] [records] [resear	1]
--	----

Here's a few tips.

- 1. [Call that person stupid], and then [leave the (room/situation)].
- 2. [Tell that person], that [they should consult an actual expert who knows what they're talking about], and then [reference someone who is]:
 - [wrong a lot], or
 - [only tells portions of a story- NOT the whole story].
- 3. [Call the police], and ask them what they think.

They may have [no idea], but [they all have the superhuman ability] to [thoroughly examine anything] in [less than 5 seconds], and then they will [give their "expert opinion"].

4. [Just ignore them], since [that's the easiest option] and [that is what most people tend to do], anyway.

Why...? Well, because [somebody said something offensive].

Besides, showing [any sign] of having been [offended] is a [sign of weakness].

- 5. [Build a sandcastle] to [distract yourself] from the [offensive comment] that was made.
- 6. Don't let some [annoying correct person] get the best of you, or [multiple other people]. Because [if you believe the same thing that a bunch of other people ALSO believe]...?

There's [no way] that [they could ALL be wrong], and (1) [annoying correct person] could be [correct].

So, if an [annoying correct person] like [Galileo] says that [the earth revolves around the sun]...?

Do what the [Roman Inquisition] did, and tell people ["the sun revolves around the earth, idiot"]. And then: [go eat some (ice cream/pizza)] to celebrate how [awesome] and [incorrect] you are. That'll show em.

All of these things are [extremely useful] if you're [stupid], and [have been offended by someone].

[That's how many people prove they're experts]. They [intentionally] confuse terms like [OPINION] and [FACT].

Besides, [everybody knows]... telling [portions of the story] is [far more compelling] than [telling the whole story], and [that's what the news does].

Besides, [the whole story] is PROBABLY [just as stupid] as [the person who keeps telling the whole story].

And THAT is [how to prove to people], that [you're a legitimate bonafide expert at being a fucking moron].

With that amount of [high-level precision] in what you do...?
You are bound to at [some point], wind up being [offended] by someone [a lot more intelligent than you are].

So, [don't leave anything to chance]. [Get ahead of the situation], by [following this quick guide].